Visiting The Thin Places Of Celtic Ireland

Visiting the Thin Places of Celtic Ireland

Jeanne Crane

Synopsis

The Irish call them Ácâ ñÉoethin placesÁcâ ñâ,,ç. For some the phrase is synonymous with holy or sacred, a place of transcendence, where one can sense the Divine and feel lifted up. Others are referring to a place where the veil is thin, where there is a gateway to the Other World or portal to the Fairy Kingdom. Still others are referring to the notion of vortexes or sites where they experience a vibrational, mystical energy. Some thin sites are natural, some pagan, some Christian, and still others made by ancient peoples who somehow knew how to channel the light of sun and moon. This 20 page (9,605 word) article highlights Ácâ ñÉoethin placesÁcâ ñâ,,ç often missed by the casual traveler. The author chooses sacred wells, standing stones, and monasteries that represent differing aspects of Celtic spirituality. She provides background information and context as well as linkages to numerous websites and suggested readings. Readers can then identify and explore their own favorites. The author also wrote Celtic Spirit- A Wee Journey to the Heart of It All, the fictional story of a group of North Americans visiting these very real Ácâ ñÉoethinÁcâ ñâ,,ç places.

Customer Reviews

Interesting but very thin. Not too much of this. Wouldnt recommend it.

For the price its a 5 stars. Now I need to look for more info about all the places mentioned.

Started ok but seemed to drift into her peronal fantasies

A quick intro to the many spiritual/sacred energy spots of Irelend, this Kindle version references other works and gives you links to other websites to do more research on your own.

Makes me want to take a trip to Ireland and visit some of the places described. Enjoyed reading about Celtic spirituality.

I love this book. It has interactive links to the internet with beautiful photos. Interesting material.

Nice job. Would have liked to have read more but a good overview!

Enjoyed reading about the ancient and spiritual sites in Ireland.
